Safari Password Decryptor is an effective application designed to retrieve lost or forgotten passwords stored in the Safari web browser. The utility detects which websites you access every day and automatically stores your username and password in a file, so it will be easy to remember them when you need them. The app works as a small utility that runs with a minimized icon in the system tray and does not take a lot of CPU or RAM when opened. However, it does run in the background and consume a bit of energy, so it is not possible to use Safari or other apps on the same machine at the same time. Users can choose to run the application automatically every time they open their web browser, or manually whenever they need to retrieve a lost password. If this is the latter option, they will need to register the profile by entering a password. The installation process is simple and quick, although we advise users to read the guidelines provided before clicking the "Next" button. This will prevent the app from installing questionable tools and performing other non-authentic actions. After the installation has been completed, it is possible to browse through a list of website URLs and check the strength of each entry by clicking the "Check Password" button. You can add additional websites to the list and export the results to a text or HTML file. There are no additional options in the main interface of the app, so you can conclude that it has just one purpose: helping you retrieve the forgotten login credentials for your web accounts stored in Safari. There is no configuration file in the application, so you will not be able to tweak the app's behaviour. We had no issues with the app, as it quickly found all the websites that stored usernames and passwords in the Safari web browser, without any exceptions. We did not come across any kind of delays, delays or issues with the program. Best alternative: The application does not provide any alternatives to its main functionality.
